A WHEELING TRAVELER IN THE He Declares that Alabama and Miss-issippi are the Eldoradas of the Brown Sedgers and Mossbacks of the Nine-teenth Century—His Trip across the Swamps from Birmingham to Jackson, the city, the lanatic asylam is situated, though in sight of the bity. It is said to be one of the finest buildings of the kind in the South.

The State House was erected in 1842, and is a very creditable building in size and architestura. Lwas, however, insultied upon extering the State library, by being confronted with a large framed corficate done up in the best style of penmanship, and to the following effect:

"Below are the names of those members of the XLIVih Congress who refused to indorse the great fraud of 1876, which placed Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, in the Presidential chair of the Nation, and William A. Wheeler, of New York, in the chair of the Vice-President, which was consummated by a majority decision of the so-called Electoral Commission adopted by said Congress. Then followed the names of all the moss-backed Bourbons who protested against the decision of a tribunal of their own getting up, and by which they hoped to steal the Presidency. I said to myself while looking upon this honoris cause (or called) certificate, that these people here in the South will persist in every conceivable manner in alienating from them their fellow-citizens of the North. Why flaunt such a certificate as the one referred to in the faces of those persons who never did them an injury, and who have no desire to cherish hatred against them? and especially, too, when they themselves were the originators of the Electoral Commission which they claim was the prime cause of their losing the Presidency. If they would get along far better, and have less cause for grumbling over the lack of properity in the South.

I leave this evening for Vicksburg. I am told that the country lying between here and the Mississippi is principally of the broom sedge order. When I get over the scale of the broom sedge order. When I get over the lack of properity in the South.

VICKSBURG.

Vicksburg is the largest town in the State of Mississippi. It is situated near the Mississippi river, four hundred miles the ansassippi river, four undred and seventy-five miles below Memphis. It stands on a high bluff about half as high as the hill back of Wheeling. It is built all over the bluff, and the streets where the production of the streets running at right angles from the river are very steep—much steeper than any in Wheeling, unless it is Twelfth street, above Eoff. There are no towns along the Mississippi Valley except those situated on the bluffs. The river bottoms are too unreliable to build towns upon. There is no elling when a freshet will come that will overflow the entire valley; and then again he waste or wash of the bottoms is very overflow the entire valley; and then again the waste or wash of the bottoms is very great. The stream is continually changing its channel. Bottoms over a mile wide shave been washed away in a single week. Therefore the only safe places to build towns are on the bluffs.

Vickaburg claims 15,000 population, but the recent census only shows about 12,000. It is a fiourishing little city, but at the same time it is not growing very rapidly. About two years sgo the river made a cut-off here which left Vickaburg about two miles from the river. This, of course, very greatly injured the business interests of the place, as the most of her traffic is dependent on the river. But one railroad taps the city, and it is as mean a one as ever a truck ran over. There is talk of starting a new town over on the present main channel of the river to be called New Vickaburg. If this is done, before another decade passes away, the owis, lizards and bats will sun themselves on the ruins of the present city.

bats will sun themselves on the ruins of the present city.

The only institution here of special in-terest is the Soldiers' National Cemetery, which is the largest, and in every respect, the finest in the Union. It is situated on a high hill, about a mile above the city, and is in splendid condition. It is ter-raced in the most improved and elegant manner, and is covered with shade trees of all kinds indigenous to this latitude. Within the enclosure sleep 16.000 of the

In my last I promised that if I could find something to write about that itshould be forthcoming. I think I can venture a hort letter, although I do not promise much.

I confess that I am-slightly prejudiced against the South. I can't help it. Really I don't mean anything out of the way; it is in me. Somehow everything strikes me as being wrong end foremost, as it were. Things don't look right, and yet the people treat me well enough. The trouble is the country is Godforsaken in appearance, and a great many of the people look the same way.

I have been over and through most of the States of the Union, and I am frank to say, and it's the truth too, that Alabams and Missispinol are the people stread of the same way.

Within the enclosure sleep 16,600 of the late heroes of the Rebellion. Each grave is marked by a nest marble headstone, on which is carved the name of the patriot and the regiment to which he belonged; and in the centre of the grounds there is flung to the breeze the ensign of our nationality, and for which these noble soldiers gave up their lives.

This is the largest cemetery in the Union; the one at Nashville, Tennessee, second, at Alington is the third, and Coattan nooga is the fourth. I have visited all of them, and am free to say that this one is by far the best arranged and best kept of any of them.
